A Car-Loud of Tar Chowlug Gum for Young Ladies' Seminaries. Hirle Dispatch !

"There's a car-load of solli comfort for the young ladles," sall a gentleman in Lawrenceville to a reporter, pointing to a car stan-ling on the Aliegheny rathroad. "Now, there's twenty-five barrels of chewing gum there," he continued. "You may not know it, but it is a fact that nearly all of the chawing gum consumatin the United States and Vassar college comes from 1'stshurg." "Of what is this multiply soluce com-provide asked the newspaper limit "Why, it's unalo from tar, and the worst of tar. The Standard Oil company is a big thing on wheels when you talk about oil, but it is just as big, relatively speaking, when you got into the province of chewing gum. You see, they control nearly all the reliner les, and it is from them that the gum is evolved, so to speak. The refinerles take the residuum from the cruis oll after the retino l'artheie has been made and work it lu an agitator, producing a certain grade of paratine, a wax like snistance. This is sent to two firms located in Besten and New York who put it through another rollying process, and then scent the stuff, cut it into small places, and then retall dealers take hold of it and make thousands of giddy girls happy with 'somethin' to chaw,' 'The wax, as foa-led on the care, is worth 17 conts a pound, but when put through the second refining process its cost is 30 cents a pound. I appear a pound of retinal parathne will unfiles for the making of 200 places of chewing-gum; so the profit in the business is apparent when you recollect that it retails for

The Loudon Postulitie. [Foreign Letter]

The London postoffice is a great instituto a A street divides the two departments, One occupied by the business of letters and papers, the other with telegraphing. In British telegraphing is part of the regular postollice system. The general postollice fordding is an imposing edition of the tonic It is 400 feet long, 130 wide, and sixty four high. The best time to see the outside rush is just imfor the p. m., at which hour the night mail chases. The rush is something tremendous Errant loys, hatloss clerks, insinose mon, everybody jams forward to get his tunde of letters into the iong a ne-odged or copper-faced opening isfore the hour strikes. Exactly at the minute haste must bave an extra stamp on them If they are to go that night.

The extra stump business lasts for an hour. It to a sight to see the stampers at work, The stamper counts the letters, and when he has stamped lifty he hits like stamp on a long sheet of paper at his right band, and thur the number of letters is estimated. Novel Mode of Extinguishing a Fire. (Patte enville (Iown) Cor, Sebutiffe American.] We had what seemed to us rather a movel male of extinguishing a fire. Feb. 16, the fire in the furnace and left it to heat up the church, this return to ring the beli for once rang the alarm. A crowd soon collected, but, in the absence of any apparatus for extinguishing fire, all hopes were given up of saving the bullding, as the fire was under the floor between the joists.

Dr. N. G. D. Coad went to his store and procured two or three buckets full of comacid; the water was then poured on the sods, and the acid empthed in a tab full of water. The windows were then opened, in order to lift the smoke from the room. The sponded to by President Oxley. material thus prepared was emptiod into the register of furnace; the experiment was a success, as the fire was extinguished in-The floor was then partly torn up to make sure, when it was found that a large number of the joists were entirely hurned through. The church was saved, and the entire business portion of the vilingo, as the wind was blowing a gale; and mothing but frame buildings, mercury down 20 degrees below zero, and a senreity of the citizens.

MR. DARNLEIGH. The handsome brick cottage, with low, French windows and broad verandas belongs to 'Squire Darnleigh; the wide, sloplng lawn with evenly oni grass and well trimmed rows of trees, the low stone wall are Squire Darnleigh's too. The square amused. brass plate on the front door has "J. I. Damleigh" in nice tidy lettere. No foolishness in the way of little llourishes and curves. Everything about 'Squire Darnleigh, his house, grounds and business were done up emooth and equare, no rough angles and loose ends.

He himself was a bright, brisk little man. not severe as one might expect, only in buslness he was that, a cheerful little man, who had a great deal to say and said it in a breezy style. He was greatly attached to his wife and two children-girls both-and thought that all a man was born for was wealth, position and subsequently happiness. He loved pretty things and filled his house with them, he was fond of good eatlng and wasn't so absorbed in his business which bore the name of J. I. Darnleigh & Co, was in a flourishing condition, as his stores in town look antiquated and sleepy.

If a men had money to invest and wanied to know the best and eafest way he went to Mr. Darnleigh. If a lady wanted the latest thing in the market of fashion, she went to J. I. Darnleigh & Co.

His family consisted of himself, wife, two daughters and a respectable retinue of servants. He would tauch rather have had a son to share tils business and honon with, but this, fate had denied him and Mr. Darnleigh was not a man to sit down and quarrel with fate. He was greatly attached to his girls. There was a saying in town that Mr. Darnleigh thought that what he had was better than any one else processed and it really looked as if they told the truth. According to him, no women eo wonderful as Mrs. Darnleigh; no girle so handsome as his; his over-fed usare and hig shepherd dog were the smartcat and finest to be found auxwhere and he never -Col Wilson, a Revenue agent, was in tired of telling anecdotes to prove the correctness of this.

Presently she put down her books as if her mind was not on them and crossing the room parted the curieins, took her seat in the low window and looked over to where a red roof was visible through dark, green trees.

Over there, she thought, under that humble roof, were taught the virtues and principles of happiness and honor to those two boys. "Al!" thought the girl, 'it is not in the palace where happiness and honor are found but in a family like that, wisely governed and rightly taught,"

A great longing came over her to go over to Edward's house and see the mother, so different from other mothers whom she knew, and the room under the low eves where Henry had studied and dresmed and

In the last two weeks it had seemed to Julia that a new leaf had been turned over in her life. There was a feeling, although as yet scarcely defined, of discontent of herself and disgust for the prescribed circle in which she moved. A new hope or aim trying to shape itself in her mind and etirring uneasily at her heart. It had come there when she firet knew Edward Graham and had been growing ever since. She had been attracted as every one to the fair and had no scruples about making him almost her sole companion at school. At recess, Edward and herself went away from the others and seated together had talked of mother and his daily home life, but most that Henry had done or said seemed to be weil ieniembereil.

"What a brove, noble boy," she thought "But I am only a girl with all of a girl'a silln.ess and weskness "

She felt that she was circumscribed by all the petty conventionalities and obliged to walk the way which society would say belonged to Mr Darnleigh's daughter. What would her ari-tocratic mother think if she should express a wish to go to Mrs. Graham',? that she was degrading herself, yes, even that, when thought the girl with bitterness, "I would do myself great honor."

Then getting, up she bathed her face and smoothed her hair, then went down to see St. Louis & the West

It had always been her custom to welcome him home from his store and spend part of the evening with him. Chatty had mede friends with her paps and Shep had forgotien his whipping, for they were all on the hest of terms when Julia found them on the verands together.

THE dispatches from Washington make our amiable Senator, Joe Blackburn, both an are and a fool, though we are certain he so by no means the latter. When Phil Thompson failed to get the appointment of Commissioner and Rhey Boyd got left for a Conenlate, both of which Joe had set his heart upon, he swore in his vengeance that the democracy was on its way to the demnition how wows and that Kentucky was as good to go republican at the next election by 80,000 as a cent is for a ginger cake But when it was given out that Jim Black burn was to be given the Collector ship, Joseph changed his tune, withdrew his dire prediction about Kentucky and administered taffy with both hands at once to the President. The latter having in the meantime found out what kind of a man insult. Jim Blackborn was and is, decided that a better man could be chosen for the office. Another change then came over the spirit of Joseph's dreams and this time his anger was fearful to behold. An Occasion When the Buys in Gray Were Not Exactly Consistent. [Arkor saw Traveler]

Ex-Congressman Canter was, during the war a proud and impressive officer. He was not afrail of the enemy and never sought a chance of keeping out of harm's way, but it was a well known fact that the clanking panoply and turkey-gobbler strut of war was to Lim quite at interesting as the gleam of the bayonet or deannon's opening rear." In January, 1863, Gunter marched his men from the northwest down to the capital city. While the men were halted on the opposite bank of the river, Gunter went over into the town, and while there became acquainted with several young ladies. In the presence of those ladies he decided to make an impres sive show; and he told them to stand upon the hotel balcony, to be cheered by his troops as they passed. "Now, boy-," said Gunter when he had gone back to his men, "when you cross over I want you to nurch just as gracefully as you possibly can. A party of ladies will be tan ling on the hotel balcony. When I take off my hat and shout, Three cheers for the ladies of Little Rock, Jeff Davis and the Southern Confederacy,' you must all cheer." The men were not in a cheering humor.

They had marched through many miles of The peacock feather to them, while it might have been picturesque, possessed not that great charm which lurks around a loaf of bread and a place to sit down. Just before arriving opposite the hotel on the baleony of which the ladies stood, one of the officers said:

Stunewall Jackson's Compilments.

["W. G E." in Chleage Times] I think that it was on the day of Port Republic (If my memory be not at fault) that tien. Jackson had ordered A. P. Hill to take a certain position and hold it. He and some of his staff were sitting on horseback on the top of a hill, in the drizzlang rain, trying to see what was going on in various parts of the field. "Jackson," as one of the stail recently sail, "was the dinglest looking man in the crowd, as nearl; he had on the sain; old cape, that was once gray, but was now a yellowish brown, the same old clothes that he had worn when he brought those cadets from the institute on that hot day, and the samo cap whose brim had hid the clock from his vision on that day; and the water penrmg off him at every corner, and off his angular, raw-bonel sorrel (that he bought trom a drove at Harper's Ferry for $200 in gold, and which is now one of the curlosities at the New Orleans exhibition, did not improve the general appearance of the motionless figures.

A. P. Hill was holding an importants position, end the enemy knew It, and were making thing, very hot for him. Finally in ail came up at a gullop. "Gen. Jackson, Gen. Hill present's his compliments and says that his ammunition is gettlig wet, and he wishes to know if a cannot retire." There was no silent debate on Jackson's part; almost immediately came to miswer: "Give my compilments t Gen. Hall, and tell him that the enemy's ammunition is getting just is wet as his is. GOOD QUALITIES OF YELLOW PINE.

The Supply Seemingly Exhaustless in the Southern States.

New York Tribune.] In places where wooden floorings or trimmings undergo severe or constant use, the valuable south ra yellow pine has become almost had spensable. In ship work its durability has been long acknowledged, but it ls only within a few years that its usefulness for house purposes has been appreclated. In former times it was todious stuff to work by hand, but its tediousness is now overcome by improved tools and steam lrossing, and the increased call for hard pine walnscotings and ceilings that has attended the active building operations of late has been readily supplied. No wooden flooring that is used bare is superior to narrow strips of Georgia yellow pine. A well-laid surface of the wood improves with age and friction, its resinous quality hardens for it a sort of natural varnish. Art, too, has recently touched this sturdy old timber. Thin deor-panols are sawed out of planks containing thick depos-When these panels are placed Its of rosin. In doors that the sun can strike, the effect produced is a rich, red who color, showing uside the room. There is a process of artiiclassy seasoning pine. There is also one of tenning it, so that the rosin will show unlformaly in the board, but the naturally veined surfaces are handsome enough when properly smoothed.

The supply of this timber seems exhaustless. A large fleet of schooners and other craft is devoted exclusively to its transportation from Virginia, North and South Carolinas, Georgia, and Florida. The latter state is renowned for the long boards that are cut from it. trees. Georgia owns the standard of quality, but any untapped stock rates high. Trees from which the pitch has been partly removed in the manufacture of turpentine, turn out lighted wool, but such cuttings have not the wearing merit of sawings from virgin trees. Since the war, owing to better railroad facilities, large tracts of new forests have been opened to commacree. Europe, especially England, is a large buyer of this wood. Its excellence in rallroad work on account of toughness and comparative lightness, is becoming recognized abroad as well as in this country

When yellow pine vessels become dis-masted or capsized at sea they form most dangerous wrecks, and at night are an especial terror to navigators. Their buoyant cargoes prevent them from sinking and they become, so to speak, a floating reef. Several abandoned schooners have been known to drift about the ocean from six to eighteen months. Not long ago one apenred on the coast of France. Captalas reort these drifts to the government. The overnment in turn spreads the information ut the danger is only partly provided gainst, as currents or driving winds can vary the situation Indefinitely.

Need Saultary Laws.

[Jee Howard in Philad-libla Press.] The recent sanitary ucts of New York attempt to hold in check the mode of building tenement houses, requiring certain menns of ventilation, and exit, forbidding the filling up of the entire space between the houses with dwellings, and otherwise seeking to improve the condition of such tenement houses. There only needs two steps further Truth and a valod are coequal. GATHERING OF THE CLANS AT AN "OLD VIRGINNY" WEDDING.

The Peverish Pacitement of Expectation-Lavish Itospitalliy - How Guests Came -Driving Pour-in-Hand-' A Time When Weddin's Was Weddin's."

Mrs. P. G. de Pantaine In New York Henride, ! which was destined to unite the interestaaml estates of two of the oldest and most in-Buential familles in Virginia. Weeks in a 1vance the claus hal been gathering from the neighboring states to do honor to the occasion, and when the day of the wedding arrived "Dakland," the ancestral home of the bride, was taxed to its utin st to accommodate the immerous guests. "Peyton Hall," the adjoining estate owned by a relative, also. No cure, no pay. Penuy & McAllater, also threw open its hospitable doors, and Praggists. was seen filled to overflowing by the wedding company that came with blg box, little box, bandb ix and bundle. Cots were placed in parlers and libraries, pallets lald on every available floor, while each lounge and sofa had one or more occupants.

In these days a wedding could not be managed as an impromptu affair, for the soil of "Old Virginny" was not then, as it now is, crossed and recrossed by hummerable railroads, and supplies had to be wagened over hundreds of miles of territory. On this ocwhich could not be manufactured upon the plantation was brought from Richmon I by canni boat to Lynchburg and from thence to Roanoke, a listance of several hundred miles, and a week being consumed in tho operation. Nothing else was talked of for nonths in advance, and the old county was stirred to its center, for nanght so revolutionizes a country place as a wedding. The neighboring forests pall their tribute in holly, and the traditional mistletoe bough was suspented on high, under which, if any victim was caught, she was compelled to pay the accustomed forfett, which could claimed by any cavaller in the room to lu-

New gowns were given to the female servants, while the brass buttons on the livery of the males were brightened to a startling degree. Old "Uncle Hen" was the centre figure in this last brigade, and the amount of importance with which he was usually invested seemed to have doubled itself on this occuon, and he became a most pronounced autoerat, dictating terms to his own color and offering suggestions to his master, who, as he had been a faithful old butler for many years, listened to him with the utmost consideration.

Oakland and Peyton hall stool sldo by ide. Each of these rich estates retained and respected the traditions which had been handed down from generation to generation by those with whose name, they were ilentified. Old landmarks were carefully preserved; old tree, bending beneath the weight of years, were jeniously kept in place by artificial means, while from the walls of the immense sal as lo kal many generations in powdered wigs, rulls, and short clothes. The owners of turse estates were gentlemon of the "old school," chivalrous, onerable and high tonid, quick to resent an insult or to avenge a wrong and just as quick to pardon an offeres where honor was not involved. They were of the stock which gave to Virginia her Light-llorse, Harry Lee, John Randolph, Robert E. Lee, and scores of other, who have male that state amous as the mother of statesmen.

Many a gay party of gentlewomen and gallant cavalars gailopel down those avenues to the summins of the hunter's horn calling them to a fox hunt or a deer chase, to return in the evening to a brilliant ball or whist party where egg-neg and hot apple toldy were the features of the evening. while the "autlers" or the "brush," trophies of the day's sport, were prominent in the decorations. Preparations were made on the most lavish scale, and although all the access ries of the supper hal to be wagoned bundreds of miles this walling is referred to by octog marians and contonarians of the county as one of the thest ever witnessed in Old Roanoke. "That was a time when wedhu's was weddin's," recently said an old gray haired servant of the family who still retalis a vivid recollection of the event.

Many of the guests came hundreds of miles in private conveyances. There were no commodious hotels near by where com-fortable quarters could be obtained for man and benst, consequently the hospitality of both Oakland and Peyton hall was severely taxed.
